

As a high school math teacher in Ohio, I know of the numerous technological tools available online to help students understand math as well as other subjects. It would be a disservice to the students to limit their learning to the classroom when there is so much more out there for them to see and it's provided in a variety of formats. This is why access to high-speed broadband at school AND at home is important for their growth.